

ONLY a dinner or two, a musicale and some small luncheons and Kenningtons broke the Lenten monotony of the past week. Although three weeks of fasting yet remain, all thoughts are now turned toward the fascinating topic of Easter millinery. Why millinery only, no one can tell, for surely the gorgeously of the Easter gowns placed on special display will rival the splendor of the hats. The time that might have been spent in doing penance for sins will shortly be devoted to studying the importations and trying the effect on mankind—and the bills on man—unkind. Just at present many hours are spent in meditation on the same subjects and with the same end in view.
